

her service to Congress until 1990, when she retired to New Orleans. In Congress she sat on the Appropriations Committee and the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, spearheading legislation on issues ranging from civil rights to pay equity for women. She chaired the committees on the Bicentennials of the American Constitution in 1987 and the House of Representatives in 1989. In 1997, President Clinton asked her to assist her country once again, this time as the American ambassador to the Vatican.

But the reasons to honor Lindy go far beyond a recitation of her resume, distinguished as it may be. Lindy Boggs continues to be a role model for those of us in Congress and thousands of young women across this country who aspire to public service. She used her Southern charm and keen political mind to become one of the most formidable forces in the U.S. House of Representatives. She served as a mentor and teacher to me as well as the Congresswomen that followed her. She not only taught them the rules and expectations of Members of Congress, she taught us how to be a strong, independent women.

Lindy is the founder of the Congressional Women's Caucus, a legislative body that has done so much in its 25-year history. Twenty-five years ago, very few women had served in the Senate, and today we have 13. Thirteen women, and that number is sure to grow. As women, we champion the rights of women everywhere from Afghanistan to China and even here at home. We are a force to be reckoned with, and Lindy is our leader.

What is most impressive about Lindy is the long list of firsts that accompany her biography. She was the first female Representative elected from Louisiana, the first women to chair the National Democratic Convention, the first women to sit on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and the first woman to serve as ambassador to the Holy See.

She continues to be my mentor and even more, my friend. It is an honor to join the entire Louisiana delegation and I am sure women in public service everywhere to honor this very special Louisiana and American, Lindy Boggs.
